Dear GCC Alumni and Friends,

We are excited to share with you the latest edition of the Glendale Community College Alumni Magazine!

As we look back on the past year, we are filled with gratitude for the unwavering support and enthusiasm of our alumni. Your involvement continues to shape and strengthen the GCC experience for current and future students alike.

At the Glendale College Foundation, our commitment to advancing student success and enhancing academic programs, departments, and campus facilities remains as strong as ever. With the dedicated leadership of our Board of Directors and the collaboration of alumni and community members alike, we are expanding our reach and making a lasting impact.

In this spring issue, you will find stories that celebrate some of the exciting milestones, collaborations, and progress we have made together over the past year. This issue is especially exciting, as we have partnered with the GCC Journalism Department to produce the magazine. Through this collaboration, students have had the opportunity to contribute original writing and gain hands-on experience, bringing fresh energy and new perspectives to these pages.

As we wind down a successful 2024-2025 school year, we look forward to celebrating a new graduating class of Vaqueros, always a powerful reminder of the potential our students carry into the world as they pursue bright futures.

We hope you will stay engaged - whether by sharing your journey, reconnecting with fellow alumni, or by supporting our mission. Your participation is vital to ensuring GCC students continue to thrive.

Thank you for being such an important part of the GCC community.

President's Perspective

Headed Towards a Century of Excellence

by Dr. Ryan Cornner,
Superintendent/President

As we celebrate 98 years of service and approach our centennial, I have found myself reflecting on Glendale Community College's remarkable journey—where we began, what we have built, and where we are headed.

When I look out over our Verdugo campus, nestled in the hills, it feels like it has always been here. Yet, it is the product of nearly a century of commitment to education and the belief that learning transforms individuals and strengthens society.

We started humbly in 1927 with just 126 students, holding classes in the afternoons at Glendale High School. Two years later, we moved to a 1908 building - now the site of the Glendale Central Library.

After the 1933 earthquake destroyed that facility, we held classes on a grass lawn in canvas tents for four years, uncertain if the College would survive.

In 1934, a bond measure to purchase land and build permanent facilities failed. But undaunted, our students stepped up. They organized, campaigned, and won overwhelming community support the following year.

Reut Cohen Schorr

An external view of the administration building at the college.

That 1935 bond victory secured the land we stand on today and, with help from the New Deal, funded the construction of our permanent facilities.

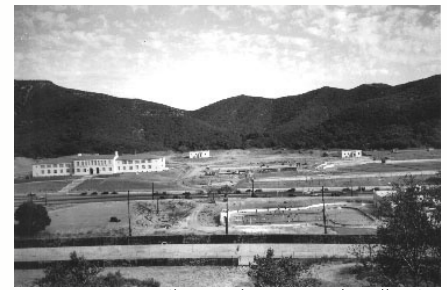

This moment defined a legacy that continues today: student leadership, backed by community support, driving lasting change.

From that small start, we now serve more than 24,000 students annually, with a dedicated team of more than 1,000 faculty, staff, and managers, making us one of Glendale's largest employers.

This year, we conferred 2,448 degrees and certificates to 919 graduates. Eighty-six percent of our students who applied to CSU were admitted, along with 76% of our UC applicants.

Our story spans nearly 100 years, but in some ways, we are just getting started. Thanks to the recent passage of Measure GCC, we are laying the groundwork for the next century as we transform our programs and facilities:

- One of our oldest buildings - Camino Real - is being transformed into our most high-tech facility, featuring virtual reality, e-sports, and maker space available to the community. It will also be home to our new Student Inclusion Center to ensure every student feels that this is a place where they belong.
- The David Viar Performing Arts Center will include a recording studio, a film and television studio complete with 4k screening rooms, music classrooms and dance studios, a recital hall, and a 400-seat conference center - designed to benefit both the campus and the community.

GCC Library, Chester Lynch Collection

- We will begin work on an industry-grade Sound Stage that will enable the expansion of our IATSE collaboration to teach live theater skills in entertainment technology. It will be home to new programs in virtual projection, programming, and content development for gaming and virtual reality, built on the fundamentals of AI. We will provide hands-on experience through industry leasing to support our local entertainment industry and our students in their career progression.
- Plans are underway for a collaborative Police and Fire Academy, to train our own local first responders for Glendale and surrounding municipalities. This center will support the safety of our community and send a message that we support our first responders.
- We are developing new programs in Occupational and Physical Therapy, fields growing in demand, particularly with no public accredited OTA programs in Los Angeles County. These programs will be built in partnership with local healthcare providers, offering students high-wage, high-impact careers, while supporting our community needs.

All of this will be done while also investing $120 million in our campus infrastructure to ensure our facilities match the excellence of our mission well into the future.

For nearly a century, we have served this community with pride and purpose. And now, we are building, with confidence and clarity, for the next 100 years.

Southern California Regional 3000-Meter Steeplechase Champion Lilit Arakelyan Takes Third Place

By Alex Leon

Sports Information Director, Retired

Much like the obstacles she faced as one of the top 3000-Meter Steeplechase runners in the state, Lilit Arakelyan faced such a dilemma on Saturday May 10 when she had to choose between appearing at a scholarship function to accept an award or run in a race at the Southern California Championships that same day. It turns out, the decision was simple.

"Just to be considered for the award was an honor but I have been training for this race all season and I wasn't going to let anything disrupt my focus and preparation," she said days before the meet. "I look at it like I was stepping aside to give another student the opportunity to benefit from the award which makes me happy and I could stay on track with my training and finish the season the best way I could."

Judging by her performance at the So. Cal Championships that day, Arakelyan took one more step towards reaching her goal of not only earning a spot in the state championships May 16 at San Mateo College as she won the title by over 20 second in a time of 11:37.36 and emerged as one of the title favorites in her last race wearing a Glendale College uniform.

"Lilit is much more than an athlete. She is a champion marked by excellence in her devotion to her sport, team, academics, and personal growth. She is both fierce and humble—relentless, yet gentle, said Assistant Track and Field Coach Tim Gutierrez.

"She brings a sense of peace to her teammates and has had a tremendous impact on our culture. It has been a privilege to be part of her journey. I am confident in saying that her time at Glendale Community College is only an introduction to her full potential."

Coach Gutierrez noted that in the buildup to the final race, Arakelyan tried to stay calm and relish the moment. That demeanor has helped when the 2023 GCC Women's Cross Country Team won its 18th straight Western State Conference Championship, finished fifth in the steeplechase at state in 2024 and concluded her sophomore year by earning All-American honors in cross country in 2024. Ultimately, she was named All-American with a third place finish in the steeplechase at State in 2025.

And what a challenge that last race was. Watching her teammates Harvell Maxwell compete in the high jump and Juan Romero in the 10,000 meters provided a needed distraction as she cheered them on with her red GCC hoodie pulled tight over her head, mindful of her preparation for her own race. In her own words, that race was not her best, but it was good enough to leave the field with her head held high and her heart full of love about what it meant to represent Glendale College as a student-athlete for the last time and leave it all on the track.

Arakelyan summed up what her Glendale College experience has meant to her and what she feels about those who helped her along the way:

"GCC provided the materials needed to paint my vision. It gave me discipline, love, patience, and grit. Every athletic staff member, athletic trainer, and coach gave me the confidence, space, help, support, and guidance to allow me to perform. Perform as an athlete, student, and especially as a person.

I thank Coach Gold, Coach Harrison and Vanhorn for pushing me towards resilience, and responsibility, as well as seeing the individual I am and can become. I thank my teammates for getting me through the season, no matter the day. They allowed me to keep faith in myself, have faith in the prosperity of the team, as well as the future of GCC cross country and Track.

Lastly, thank you to Coach Tim for giving us all a new flame of passion under the pain, in order to submit the body to what the mind wants. Thanks to Coach Tim I feel reborn as an athlete, person and teammate. Without him I would not now recognize that I am indeed an "animal" of an athlete, that's waiting to seize every opportunity."

Former Men's Basketball Coach Brian Beauchemin Honored With Gym Floor Dedication

By Alex Leon

Sports Information Director, Retired

Family, friends and alumni gathered at Glendale Community College on Saturday November 23 for the dedication of Brian Beauchemin Floor in the Verdugo Gym.

Beauchemin coached Men's Basketball at GCC for 35 years and amassed 592 career wins and is considered one of the most successful coaches in the history of California Community Colleges.

The milestone ceremony is part of the GCC Athletics Capital Campaign that was launched in 2021 with the intention of raising funds to create an endowment to support the needs of GCC teams and the student-athletes that make up the 16 teams that compete at Glendale College.

The Athletics campaign has raised approximately $500,000 thus far and future plans include naming the athletic stadium for former Head Football Coach and Athletic Director John Cicuto and recognizing major donor and alumna Patty Mack.

Special Note

We are honored to introduce Farah Al Humairi's article spotlighting Carissa Coane, GCC's 2025 Pulitzer Center Reporting Fellow. Carissa's investigative project on the Sámi community in Sweden exemplifies the mission of our Pulitzer Center Campus Consortium: to empower student journalists to explore underreported global issues with depth and integrity.

Supported by the Glendale College Foundation, our Campus Consortium is a unique collaboration between the Journalism and History Departments at GCC. We are proud to be the only community college in California — and one of the few nationwide — partnering with the Pulitzer Center to offer students opportunities for international reporting, mentorship from seasoned journalists, and professional development focused on storytelling that matters.

Carissa's commitment to shedding light on the challenges faced by the Sámi people underscores the transformative power of student-led journalism. Her work not only brings attention to marginalized communities but also inspires meaningful conversations on human rights and social justice.

From GCC to Sámi: Carissa Coane's Reporting Journey

By Farah Al Humairi
Student Reporter

Carissa Coane, a student journalist at Glendale College, has taken on a special role as the 2025 Pulitzer Center Fellow. Her project will delve into the often-overlooked challenges faced by the indigenous Sámi community in Sweden, shedding light on issues of gender violence and racial discrimination.

Selected through an attentive process by GCC's Pulitzer Center Campus Consortium, Coane's project focuses on investigating the excessively high rates of intimate partner violence against Sámi women. Inspired by her travels and research, she aims to challenge misconceptions about Nordic countries as beacons of equality.

"I first learned about the Sámi people during a trip to Norway," Coane explained. "Their history of forced assimilation and ongoing struggles resonated deeply with me. This fellowship is an opportunity to bring attention to their plight."

The Pulitzer Center Fellowship not only supports Coane's research financially but also provides crucial mentorship and networking opportunities.

Dr. Reut Cohen and Professor Michelle Stonis from Glendale College emphasized the significance of such opportunities for student journalists. "The fellowship empowers students to explore uncharted territories of journalism," Dr. Cohen said. "It's about fostering skills that go beyond the classroom."

In addition to her investigative work, Coane is passionate about advocating for policy changes that benefit the Sámi community. Her project aims to influence Swedish legislation on reindeer herding and hopes to advocate for greater agency for Sámi women. Challenges abound, particularly due to the lack of existing research on her topic.

Looking ahead, Coane hopes her work will prompt global conversations on human rights and inspire concrete actions to support indigenous communities worldwide.

GCC Wildfire Relief Fund

By Gissel Nolasco
Student Reporter

Glendale Community College wasted no time in stepping up to support students, faculty, and staff affected by the tragic January wildfires in the region. To provide immediate and long-term support to the more than 120 members of the GCC community who have lost their homes or have faced difficult obstacles including long-term evacuations, the Glendale College Foundation created the Wildfire Relief Fund less than 48 hours after the fires broke out.

“The [GCC] Foundation’s work is always focused on supporting the needs of our campus community,” Paola Santana, who leads the Foundation, noted. “It was natural for us to launch this fundraising effort to provide relief to those impacted by the fires.” Within just a few days, the Wildfire Relief Fund received vital support from more than 150 donors to date, including GCC employees, alumni, local community members, corporate partners, and philanthropic organizations.

Contributions to the Wildfire Relief Fund can be made online at <http://bit.ly/GCCFireRelief>.

The GCC Human Resources (HR) team immediately contacted employees living in impacted areas and GCC CARES began contacting students immediately to ensure access to key support services.

In partnership with the Glendale College Foundation, GCC has been able to provide app codes and gift cards for food delivery, emergency hotel vouchers, retail gift cards, hygiene supplies, and cash disaster relief payments to help students and employees alike find new housing.

The Glendale College Foundation said it is committed to providing long term support to GCC community members impacted by the wildfires as the need for recovery continues. “We know that recovery from such a disaster is a long-term process. We’ll continue to raise funds and provide aid tailored to the specific needs of our students, faculty, and staff during times of crisis,” Santana said.

Thank you to the generous partners who have supported the Wildfire Relief fund.

Theatre Arts Department Offers Myriad Opportunities

By Carissa Coane
Student Reporter

GCC's Theatre Arts Department is committed to providing opportunities, both on and off campus, for students to explore their interests in a variety of areas.

In November, Theatre Arts major Grace Temblador and Media Arts student Sharukh Khan made their directorial debuts in the special production "Spotlight on Shanley: Three One-Act Plays." Temblador and Khan each chose their source material, cast actors, and ran rehearsals on their own. "Getting to watch the two of them direct for the first time was very rewarding, and I was amazed by what they were able to accomplish," Theatre Arts instructor Jeremy Lewis said in an interview.

"Being able to observe the audiences' reactions and witness how our work resonates with people up close was wonderful," stated Temblador. "A student from the welding program who had never seen live theatre before in his life came to one of our shows after finding a flyer about it, and he was just blown away by what he saw. That warms my heart. That's why we're doing this: to connect with students and have an impact beyond the theatre department."

For both Lewis and fellow Theatre Arts instructor Melody Gunter, who specializes in Technical Theatre, "Spotlight on Shanley" was the first GCC production they worked on that utilized student directors.

"I appreciated working with peer directors, and found it interesting to compare their interpretations of the material to Jeremy's interpretations," Gunter observed.

Through the department's membership in the Kennedy Center American College Theatre Festival (KCACTF) program, Theatre Arts students and faculty alike have received recognition for their efforts. In February, GCC hosted the KCACTF's regional festival, at which Gunter received the Excellence in Theatre in Higher Education award, and Lewis was awarded the Kennedy Center Gold Medallion, which is the highest honor in Theatre Education. Department Chair Jeanette Farr has also been recognized by the Kennedy Center in prior years. In addition to previously receiving both the Gold Medallion and Excellence in Theatre in Higher Education awards, Farr's play "Hedda on Fire" received Distinguished Recognition at the organization's Playwriting Awards Program.

GCC student actors Emily Torres, Harmony Elise Jones, Emily Anasti, Brenda Malkonyan, and Payton Ross were also honored at the festival, as were student volunteers David Pumphrey and Sydnee Marks.

In addition, Temblador was named National Outstanding Member of the Kennedy Center's Student Advisory Board, enabling her to participate in a paid internship in Washington, D.C. during the spring semester, an opportunity she described as "surreal."

"There's a narrative, especially among community college students, that people in this field only ever end up in dead-end jobs, but I haven't found that to be true," Temblador noted.

"It's definitely a viable career." While she has been a student at GCC, Temblador has taken on 11 different paid gigs as a stage manager for various production companies, and she credits the support of her instructors as instrumental to her success. "The department aims to support students as much as we can through the process, but we also give them the resources to be independent when they want to," Lewis explained.

He also believes that community college students are uniquely positioned to benefit from a theatre arts education. Gunter is working with the college to develop the Entertainment Technology Academy, which will offer four new certificates in technical theatre and plans to open in the 2025-26 academic year. "Our goal is to get students into unions and employed as technicians upon graduation," she clarified.

"The nice thing about technical theatre is that the people who wouldn't necessarily want to act get to be a part of the backstage community — they become theatre people, too," Gunter elaborated. "I encourage anyone who is curious to try our program out. You don't need to have had any experience!"

Temblador urges students to try out acting classes, asserting that "Some people take them just to get out of their comfort zones, and it completely transforms them."

"People have misconceptions about what theatre is, and what their own capabilities are," Lewis insisted. "There are people who want to be singers, but can never really do it because they're tone-deaf. It's not like that in theatre. All of this can be taught."

Alumni Spotlight: Dr. Armen Gregorian

Nare Garibyan

GCC Academic Counselor & Coordinator, GCC
Science Lecture Series

In “The Creative Act,” Rick Rubin states, “success has nothing to do with variables outside yourself,” and Dr. Armen Gregorian, a Glendale Community College (GCC) alumnus, who is a leading colorectal surgeon in the Los Angeles area, epitomizes this line of thought, as is evident along his academic and career trajectory.

While outside variables exist in the lives of students, such as competitive admissions rates, mandatory standardized testing, pressures of work, and uneven academic and career opportunities, Dr. Armen Gregorian has overcome similar challenges by believing in himself first and being open to adjustments along the way.

Dr. Gregorian (MD, FACS, FASCRS) shared his expertise and personal story during GCC’s April 2025 Science lecture reflecting on how his journey began at GCC; his father worked on campus who spoke highly about GCC at home. Due to low SAT scores during high school, Armen decided to attend GCC and study Biology. He says, “GCC was amazing for me personally. I had amazing [professors] with one-on-one teaching...I was very focused at GCC and worked hard for two years.” Dr. Gregorian transferred to UCLA followed by Chicago Medical School, and a subspecialty fellowship in colon and rectal surgery at Brown University.

Courtesy Photo

Throughout his educational journey, Dr. Gregorian’s biggest challenge was to improve his reading comprehension, and while he could have given up, he did not, instead he incrementally strengthened his English language skillset that he continues to work on today. Dr. Gregorian recommends that “students should not just focus on their strong points but also work on their weak points.” This self-discipline and standard of success comes from within, and Dr. Gregorian is proud that he survived seven years of surgical training. And that he can provide the highest level of care for his patients within his practice of colorectal and general surgery.

Dr. Gregorian has mastered the da Vinci robotic technique that allows for minimally invasive robotic surgery; he uses this system for surgeries on the colon and rectum with the highest success rate in the nation, with low complications. His advice to decrease the likelihood of colorectal disease is to maintain a high fiber diet, which nurtures the good bacteria in the gut. He says, this “allows [for] a very stable homeostasis [which] decreases the chance of any inflammatory process which is linked to malignancy. Patients who develop malignancies or infections may need an operation to remove the bad part of the colon.” He is always evolving in his practice of anorectal pathology and is committed to reducing the patient’s pain and discomfort so they can continue to live their fullest lives.

Dr. Gregorian’s highest standard of success is to maintain his life and work balance with fellow practitioner, Dr. Michelle Kolsi Gregorian, who specializes in pediatric medicine, and who is also the mother of their two children, Sarineh and Levon. And it is family that drives him and makes it all worthwhile.

Growth Mindset is Key to Lady Vaqueros' Winning Basketball Strategy

By Jenny Beres
Student Reporter

Despite the Lady Vaqueros being eliminated from the 3C2A State Women's Basketball Semifinals, the team reflected on its winning season and shared insights into its playoff journey and lessons learned.

Lisette Meza, a sophomore point guard, told El Vaquero that the key to success is “adapting to each other’s skills, strengths, and weaknesses.” She continued, “it’s been a long journey because it’s like a new group every year and this year’s team was predominantly freshmen and last year’s team was predominantly veterans.”

“With every possession, you’re learning something new,” said Meza.

When it comes to what Meza would like to take from this season and into the next she added the team’s “growth mindset.”

For Evelyn Birau, a sophomore and team forward, growth is also something she’s the most proud of this season. “We had a very young team, so we had to grow a lot and faced a lot of adversity. We’ve made so much progress and that’s something I’ll take with me forever, regardless of the outcome.”

Besides the team’s formal, on-court development, both players shared that simple moments off the court, like listening to music in the weight room, bonding on bus rides, and “just getting to know each other during warmups” helped to develop overall trust and the team’s growth mindset.

Head Coach Joel Weiss, who has been the GCC Women’s Basketball head coach for the past 9 years, said that when it comes to what lessons he would take from this year and into the next “we had a terrific year, and every group is different. You just stay the course and keep coaching.”

Jenny Beres

Weiss explained that the team culture is defined by core principles that have been built over the past nine years and remain timeless with every new group. “Unselfishness, toughness, playing hard, playing together... are all mandatory for a successful program,” Weiss said. But when it comes to the game itself, “they are trying to win every possession on the court from mid-September.”

Coach Weiss also provided insight into the collaborative culture that dominates the women’s basketball team and said that “culture takes time to build” and that “the players that come to our program, know the style of play that we play - which is good team basketball. It might sound simplistic, but that’s what it is.”

As the 2024-2025 Vaqueros basketball season came to an end, the Lady Vaqueros remained focused on continuing to foster a growth mindset that has defined their success with an eye already on next season.

Creative Writing Night Brings Expression and Community to GCC

By Zhanna Kazazyan and Lucas Lignini

Student Reporters

Glendale Community College's Language and Communication Pathway hosted its first-ever Creative Writing Night in April, an evening of literary workshops, collaboration, and community that drew more than 100 attendees.

The event was free and open to the public. Current and former GCC students and faculty were present, as were other members of the greater Glendale community. Students pursuing various majors were drawn to the event, rather than strictly those in writing-related fields. GCC Freshmen Evan Ellersieck and Jared Bautista, who are Economics and Architecture majors respectively, were present. Bautista said that he attended because he felt that creative writing could potentially aid him in the future as an architect by improving his ability to describe his work.

Sociology instructor Romy Griep, one of the event participants, was highly impressed. "I could tell a lot of planning and thought went into the format, scheduling, and content of the evening. I also really enjoyed the overall goals, which were to highlight the excellence of each advisor as well as showcase individual brilliance from each group," Griep said. "I've learned from pretty much every department on campus, and this was my opportunity to learn from our incredible English professors. I cannot recall an event quite like this one, so I was really excited to get this opportunity. I had a wonderful time, and I hope they lead a series based on the success of this one workshop!" Griep added.

Each of the four workshops covered a different field of creative writing: narrative writing, poetry, playwriting/screenwriting, and exploratory writing, a broader workshop meant for those who were unsure where their interests lay. Most of the time was spent in the workshops, which served as the evening's central focus.

The workshops were led by GCC's creative writing faculty, many of whom are also distinguished writers outside of the college. For instance, the workshop in poetry was conducted by Kate Martin Rowe, who teaches writing at GCC and curates the annual GCC Student Reading Series. Rowe's poems and nonfiction have also appeared in several literary magazines and journals, including The Los Angeles Review of Books, and The Beloit Poetry Journal. During her workshop, Rowe gave participants the chance to study elegy and ode by reading, analyzing and discussing them and showed the power and possibility of self-expression through poetry.

English Division Chair Francien Rohrbacher was present and shared her thoughts on why the event was hosted. "We're holding this not only because we want to promote creative writing at GCC, but we also believe that currently ... we want to encourage community; to talk to each other. Poetry and creative writing can transcend a lot of political stuff and people can talk about what's going on and get into that humanity that we all share," Rohrbacher explained.

The event was followed by snacks and refreshments provided by Glendale College Foundation and live music by the Guerra/paz band.
